INDIGENOUS NEWS:

JANUARY 4 IS NATIONAL RIBBON SKIRT DAY

from APTN, Canadian Press

In Isabella Kulak's home are hundreds of letters, notes and pictures of ribbon skirts from across Canada and beyond from those who consider her story and the origins of "Ribbon Skirt Day" as inspirational.

"I have like a whole notebook of letters, a whole stack of drawings from all these schools and it makes me feel so happy and it warms my heart," said Isabella, a shy 15-year-old,

About five years ago, Isabella, a member of the Cote First Nation in Saskatchewan, wore a ribbon skirt to formal day at her school. It was the last day before Christmas break. Her school told her that she should have worn a store-bought dress. She returned home and cried. The Good Spirit School Division later apologized.

Her story was met with mingled anger over the perceived racism and with support for the Isabella. Isabella's experience in December 2020 was the thread that stitched together a national Ribbon Skirt Day in Canada. In December 2022, an act to establish Jan. 4 as National Ribbon Skirt Day received Royal Assent. That was the first day Isabella returned to school after Christmas break, alongside family members who were wearing ribbon skirts. "It's like the world woke up and decided it was time to have a change happen," said Lana (Isabell's mother), looking back.

Ribbon Skirt Day means much more to Lana than the cultural attire. She sees it as a symbol of dealing with intolerance.

"With Isabella's story opening up so many different eyes and so many different positive stories coming from this, it really, really makes me happy to see what's happening for my children and the future generations seeing such a positive change," said Lana.
